

Mondello Car track day training EDIT: 12th July'13

Posted by Tsporter - 2012/08/22 15:59

Heads up for anyone interested in doing the track day training before the end of the year... I rang Mondello earlier and there is only one more scheduled on the 26th September 2012 in the afternoon. I put my name down but she wouldn't take payment as she said it won't go ahead if there isn't enough people.

It's €50.

So get yer names down, it's meant to be a great course....and I plan on becoming a trackday regular after it!! :woohoo:

Hmmm don't see it on the mondello website?

How did you hear about it?

Nice one, could be a nice little tester for the beams if she's good to go by then!

Might bring the roadcar out as they would not be happy to see a trackcar coming down for what could be classed as testing.

That is cool with me.

Tint the windows ray and they wont know a thing :P

Need to see if i can get the day off for this! Also be cool if I could have all the new suspension bits on the car.

I booked it just now, as 2 mates wanted to do it...

There are only 6 names down so far, they need ten so give them a ring and put your name down if you are thinking about it!

Had a great afternoon in mondello, and the sun came out for us. This is well worth doing and easily worth the 50 squids. The car was fantastic and never missed a beat, except for my aftermarket immobiliser but that's cause I don't know how the bloody thing works. I got a few passenger laps in the safety car M3, now that was impressive driving.

The NA is easily enough power for me at the moment, it's gonna be fun practising the lines at the ISDC Trackday. Brakes were dead on, tyres were dead on and the engine was pulling very well. I my have caught the bug :-)

Anyway definitely recommend doing this!

There's a training day on the 29th May in the afternoon, for those that are interested. €50 very well spent! And about as safe as you can be out on mondello!

You use your own car.

You start with a classroom session, then onto the track following the instructor with a radio in each car. He'll stop at various corners and show you the lines, etc. Then back to the classroom for another short while, then back to the track with the radios for a few laps. Then another chat, then a few laps to go around at your own pace.

That's what I did anyway. It's a great introduction and great value for the track time you get. Should give good confidence for when you do a full trackday.

Erin,

If its a track training day the format is this:

Class->walk couple of corners on the track -> slow laps -> faster laps -> class -> fast laps
They provide helmets as it is only training day.

It is really a great day out, the instructors lead u around and show u the lines, you have walkie talkies, and they talk to u and tell u the lines.... 'Turn in at the oak tree etc' :)
Enjoy :)

You use your own car.

Great afternoon down in mondello yesterday, it turned into a little mini meet too with got92tubby and Japohara down for a look. I'm looking forward to the day I can have passenger laps in their cars!

My mates had their puma down for its first trackday aswell. My car ran very well as usual except when the battery bracket came loose and contacted the positive terminal cutting the power to the car, but it was an easy fix thankfully.

Here's a vid following the puma which goes off at dunlop and then my car cuts out at the first corner...with got92tubby on board!

Another here trying to keep with an Evo and a spin....as soon as got92tubby mentions time! :-)

Had a great time thanks for the spin brian. Sorry for mentioning times but your puma friends had give me strict instructions to push you on. :P

kcd it was great just sorry i didnt get there much earlier feckin work alwasys getting in the way of fun. Government have this country ruimed the work fun ratio is really gone the wrong direction .

Also kc to darren for getting the whole family involved dont think i will have a car there this year might try and pick up a cheap two over the winter and prep ir for next year. Dont fancy taking my road car out would be worried about running out of tallent dont fancy showing up with a car and and bring home the steering wheel :laugh:

hopefully get down earlier for the next one.

The app is called Track Addict Pro, it's €5.99.
The heat was killing my iPhone yesterday so it was only picking up a few laps each session.
