I look forward to seeing the finished project.

Are the rear quarters going to be riveted or bonded onto the car ?

Fair play for undertaking this build.

I'm jealous but also looking forward to the end result.

Good luck!

here is an update of the build so far rusted sill cut out and part was replaced and all area treated rear quarters fitted bonded and pop riveted had to sand down some areas of the kit to get a snug nice fit next will be the side skirts

heres a few pics

Your image links are broken, when posting images use the direct link from photobucket then put `&` at the start and `&` at the end of each image url (without the spaces).

your code is right at the start and end the part that is, but it must end in .jpg and then the end part of your code. So use the direct image link and then put the code you have used at the start and end of the direct link.

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Jus wondering are you flushing the whole kit together? I mean between the bumpers and wings and quaters etc?

Ill have to tidy up the one we have and do a few pics together? ;)

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Posted by dmac - 2014/01/25 23:28

its not something i want to do but i might have to do it with the rear arches and the skirts but i hope not i like the lines, they would be a nightmare if done any flex in the kit and they crack so even if i have to do some ill find a way of not joining them have a small gap so it wont crack as easy

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

I will man but not right now.. It needs alot of work. Ive a rev 3 turbo to go into it yet and some minor fibre glass work, but dont know how ill fair out matching the paint as its pearlesent paint from house of colour. Would probably be easier respray a different colour all together(the joys of a kit car on Irelands roads) may start a thread soon and show progress from start to end. What colour have you in mind for yours or are you leaving it white? :)

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Posted by Infamous - 2014/01/26 04:35

Yeah I'd say if you can avoid smoothing the kit out that would be the best thing to do. It not only looks better with the lines but it also makes it easier down the line if you ever need repairs or decide to part the car out etc.

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Posted by dmac - 2014/01/27 10:07

Infamous your right about the lines ,dont think ill ever part the car if anything it will just be a money pit a fun money pit never the lessbut with the side skirts not matching up at the rear there will be a high possibility of the it being smoothed in

Been awhile since my last update , at the moment we are at the filling and sanding stage which is a real pain when you dont know what your doing :blush: but sure soldier on regardless if anyone has any tips for this please share

I am in need of some parts aswell

Exhaust twin pipe

Nice seats

Black roof card

Ideas for indicators on wings as dont want to cut into wing

i will be plasti dipping the car white because funds are low and i hope it will hide the bad flushing of the panels in time i will get it done right anyway thanks for tips in advance :)

I'm no expert, but what I have read is that to have the bodywork finished in good condition is all in the preparation.

Use your hands to find flaws in the bodywork. A fine mist of primer helps to show up the imperfections.

Take your time and don't try to rush it. :)

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Posted by spla300 - 2014/05/15 22:26

awesome job, just take your time with it, make sure you have plenty of light that way you will be able to spot any imperfections a bit easier, stand back and try looking at it from all angles, maybe have someone else have a look at it with ya, 4 eyes are better than 2 :P

As for indicators you dont need any on your wings i dont have any on mine and had no problems so 1 less thing to worry about and 2 lightbulbs less to replace :)

Ive seen plasti dip a few times before and something about it makes it look cheap and i didnt really like it, i think wrapping would be a better option but its up to you what you decide to do.

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Posted by dmac - 2014/05/15 23:13

Thanks spla i have 8 eyes looking at it all see different things :laugh: not a bad idea about indicators i would love to wrap it but the prices im getting are mad id get a full spray for the same , i could try it myself but i know it would be a waste of money , the thing about doing projects you have to know your limits , if anyone knows lads that do good wraps for cheap id love to get it done

I was inquiring recently about plastidip and I was informed by a couple of guys who have used it in the past that they are now using Frosts liquid wrap instead, it's similar product but apparently you can get better results with it.

Here is there website...

<http://www.frost.co.uk/coatings/frost-liquid-wrap-rubber-coating-spray.html>

I know a guy who supplies it in the north but there may be a supplier in the south as well. Just thought I'd let you know if you are set on a plastidip style paint job.

Fair play dmac looking good so far I have to agree with Marty and spla. Paint work takes severe patience and no harm to put a few halogen lights around the car and look at it from different angles. Also a tip, use a high built primer that will cover most minor imperfections And spray a mist of black paint over it. Wet sand with p1800 till black mist spray is gone at least you will know ya havent missed a spot and repeat this if needed. Its all in the prep. Even leonardi Di vinci couldnt make it look flawless without prepping it right. Im going to spray my own when it comes down to it so I feel ur pain. Best of luck.. Also trds look mad watever the colour. ;)

how are you gonna bolt the door on after everything is bonded?
Doseent look like the wing will come off easy as its moulded into the sideskirt.

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Posted by dmac - 2014/05/17 18:17

Ah here spla im not that bad ;) the doors were taken off to be filled they will go back on no problems, i had them on when everything was bonded to make sure they passed the sideskirts without rubbing

http://i1333.photobucket.com/albums/w623/Dmacmr2/Mobile%20Uploads/image_zps3c918373.jpeg

In this pic its all bonded the cardboard is jammed between the door and sideskirt to give a gap when the bond sets and the door is on

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Posted by spla300 - 2014/05/17 19:29

Ive no doubt you know how to bolt them back on, its just that i always take the wing off to take the door off and it doseent look like your wing will come off yours thats why im asking.
But thats a good way of taking them off too actually, i think ur onto something there lol
I always take mine off leaving the hinges on the door.
Ur doing great keep it up, cant wait to get mine finished for the summer too i know exactly how you feel, im nearly on the prepping stage too now.

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Posted by dmac - 2014/05/17 19:34

I leave the hinges on the car because there is a guide on the bolts so no lining up of the door it only goes in one place where toyota wanted it to go
Whats your project ?

First off, one mans drink is another mans poison and all that.

Personally I think it is just OK.

I would need to see it in the "flesh" if I was going to commit to doing something like that.

I won't say that I don't like it, but I have seen a lot nicer paint jobs.

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

If you do go ahead and do it yourself, I definitely want to see it in person.

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

As far as I can tell, with the plasidip, you have two options.

1. Play it safe and choose a more acceptable common car colour.
2. Be really radical and try something bonkers. You may get fed up with it in the near future though.

Good or bad idea?

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

I'm not sure on the relocation as that would put it within the cabin.

I'm thinking on the safety aspect.

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Is the car ready to be sprayed now?

If ur not sure about the colour just spray it black, thats what im doing.

If you are plasti dipping it you will always have a lovely black base to start off with.

I hope ur not applying plastidip straight to fiberglass..

it has to be primed sprayed and lacquered first to protect it as much as possible from cracking overtime and the filer from cracking off.

I had a widearch bodykit on my celica before and after a year it was covered in little cracks because there wasnt enough coats of paint to hold it together.

No need for too many coats on the metal body and doors as there isnt much flex on them.

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Posted by spla300 - 2014/05/30 22:48

because its not original :P

White would be difficult to keep clean.

I think they came in red too, red looks better.

Just keep it stored out of the suns uv rays in a garage so the paint dosent fade.

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

No plasti dip got a can of and did not like it so will be going to get a proper paint job and finished right

I will be asking the painter to do what you said spla thanks for the tip

Colours ice white , candy red or some sort of copper maybe

The car is nearly ready, anything we missed will be done by the painter

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Posted by spla300 - 2014/05/31 00:33

Yeah i was turned off plastidip the first time i saw it myself, looks cheap.

You should go for pearl white or pearl red, i was gonna do mine in pearl black but sure no point since most of the car will be covered in stickers, wont even see the paintjob to appreciate it so i decided to spray it standard black.

Really!?!
Red looks better than white :nono: (says the owner of a red one)
White is best, and also is well known as the Fastest color!
(says the guy with a white one :casual:)

In all honesty though;
I'm glad you decided to not plasti-dip but either Red or White would look great :yes:
Why I suggested White is that it won't fade and as its the cars original color, will be cheaper, quicker and easier to paint instead of going a totally different color.
Best of luck what ever you decide!

I think you should stick with an OEM colour.
Any of the colours the mr2 came in look well IMO, this will be especially true after some new paint is applied and it's to a widebody so it'll look even better!
Also it just makes it easier if you need to touch up etc in the future.

Ur gonna have to spray yours red too and i doubt ur gonna want to do that.

You could also go for something like this then just leave the spoiler supports on and see what you get.

Did you see my track car? ill have it looking similar.

I think spraying yours the original colour of the car would be the best choice then.
and the paintwork wont get as hot in the summer,

yep you will have plenty of time to drive a boring one coloured car when you get old, no point in getting a very nice car and trying sneak around in it.

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build dmac whats the story with your suspension?

You do know I have four Tein coilovers springs and shocks for sale?
Lots of interest but no cash buyer yet? I need funding for my own car!

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Posted by dmac - 2014/07/09 07:28

I got cusco rear coilovers put in the back and lowering springs on the front , but the shocks and top mounts were fecked on the front and the coilovers are horrible to drive tried to stiffening them up and loosen them but they ride like i have square wheels on the back
So had a spare set for the front with new top mounts bought off onto a good while back for another car now have them in and the are fine just rubbing in the passo wheel arch
Back drivers side drive had to be redone last night as there was no play to move it around think the bearings were back to far and one coilover taken out caliper was missing a bolt also
So tonight is to take out coilover put back last standard shock in rear then i think thats it fingers crossed

Cashy id love to buy them but have not got that sort of cash spare at the mo missus will try to kill me if you still have them down the line who knows and to be honest i have had my fill of shocks for now

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Posted by spla300 - 2014/08/12 21:00

the reason the paint came off there is because its really difficult to clean out them little gaps from dust and dirt so the paint didnt stick and came off, the right way to do it is to take off all panels. I wonder what other parts of the car they didnt clean properly, wait and find out as the paint falls off over time, that rear plastic part is gonna crack all the way around, it should have been taken off, get an estimate of how much it will cost to fix and tell them to pay up.

Looking good dmac. Have to agree with spla. The areas that are peeling May not have been preped properly. Paint work can be very finaky. there are loads of factors to take account of like how long was it in the oven for? Paint isn't properly dry for a few weeks after a respray. Some people even leave it two weeks to even apply laquer on a fresh paint job. The smallest thing in the prep can make an awful difference in the finish. Seen as its from a reputable paint shop they should be obliged to sort It.

Well there are a number of other panel beaters around that will repair the poor work ..

Don't let it drag on get it sorted ASAP if you decide to go back to them ...

If you let it drag on they will be less lightly to help ..

All you can do after that is anyone who asks tell them about your experience ...

Let them know how unhappy you were with the service you got ...

Let them decide whether to deal with them or not from there ...

Honesty is the best policy ...

Although some people might consider that to be childish ...

However it is you that is out of pocket so I would say it would be justified ...

I have got a price to fix it and i am considering going to the small claims court

They will not be going near my car again

And anyone who asks about them will be told the truth its not childish business runs on word of mouth you fuck someone over you suffer when they tell people about it, they have loads of pics of my car on their internet ads for their business so i might make a few comments on the ads

Right lads have a bit of a problem and need some help please at the start of this project i should have cut the original arches on the rear for clearance of the wheels but did not know this, now i am stuck with the rear wheels rubbing, i have stock shocks and springs on the rear but any dip in the road the rear end rubs so i dont want to cut the arch now as i was told it is double skinned which will require welding, im not sure how much can be cut before i hit the seem welded area either so i was thinking of rolling the arches

Any info or tips would be of great help cheers

Takeshi's castle mechanics by braille..

Tools required - a Tool.. with 14 pound lump hammer, persuader bar and optional head gear.

Looks like it turned out as smooth as rubbing a 1kg bag of dry roasted peanuts

@dmac - car is class and turned out great, a credit to the work gone into it :yes:

Hope you find a solution to the arches (without hammer), failing that I could straight swap you a set of 14" original alloys ?? leave it with you for consideration :silly: ;)

That they do spla

right update time yesterday spent the whole day putting on the trd exhaust, sub frame was taken down to fit it the middle section on, very happy with the sound of the exhaust
Rear arches were also rolled to see if it would stop the rubbing roads were so bad last night after working on the car i could not test it to find out

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

They didnt do alot of things the more time goes by the worse the car gets, so it will have to get a full spray

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Posted by julio - 2014/12/30 19:59

Where did ya get it done ? I'd be sending a slister letter only costs 60euro , see what response you get from that . a respray now is big work , sanding down to primer or metal and then whole process again , usually if the primer isn't decontaminated its like trying to stick paint to a shiny surface thus causing bubbling because of a tiny layer of either dust or a cold surface causing a tiny gap in the paint

Re: 2000 gt wide arch kit build

Posted by Infamous - 2015/04/22 17:27

I refurbished two sets of split rims, the lips arent chromed.

To get the marks out of the lips you need to sand them out, best to use varying grades of sand paper, then polish the hell out of them and apply a wheel sealant afterwards to keep the dirt off them.

I used this for polishing http://www.planetpolish.com/ebay/prod_belgom_alu.png though there are loads of other wheel polishes out there.
