Fair play, best of luck with it.
No surprise to me seeing as you clean the car more often than you sit in / drive it, as with all your cars.
There is every chance most people eat from surfaces dirtier than your car.

Cozzy, best of luck with your new venture, really love seeing people taking a chance and backing themselves in life.

Work hard, work well, accept compliments and complaints. Listen to what is being said by your customers even when you think you are right. Their perception may not be the same as yours and knowing what their needs are is your route to repeat business.

Kc'd.

PS: sorry for the late reply, seen this thread when you put it up but didn't have a chance to offer some sagely advice.

Can't recommend Cian/Cozy highly enough. He did a great job on my red mk2 and is a great guy to deal with. Very reasonable too:)

Would recommend him to anyone.

Wow i havent been on this site in years. Ive come a long way from where i was on this page a few years back. Ive only just started my page again if anybody wants to have a look at what im upto these days. Ive been detailing cars for msl cork the last 3 years. Im after correcting and protecting hundreads of cars since then. I still have my mr2 parked up in my shed wakting a clutch and a bit of tlc
