I think if you read the tread on the site about them they were all built as na so you will probably have to do a conversion

Just had a quick read of spidys tread again from his research between 88-91 total produce of which 1-2 rumered to be turbos if you manage to get one that will most defo be a rare motor. Good luck with your search if you do manage to track one down do your check on the chasis plate to see if it was an original turbo car because it sounds like it will be extreamly expensive.

The mk2 variant is known as the Spider.
The Mk3 is the Spyder.
I'm not sure if you've seen this thread but there's a bit more info on this car there.
<http://mr2.ie/mr2-forum/10-general/4791-info--history-of-the-trd-sw20-spider>

You'll notice in that thread I post up any time I see one for sale, which isn't very often. I regularly browse auction sites and on the odd occasion a Spider does come up for sale its always been in the N/A guise.

So if you do manage to buy one you would more than likely have to convert to turbo yourself.

Alternatively you could buy a t bar turbo car and convert it to a spider yourself.

Patrick from the UK forums has done this recently.

The thread for his project can be found here...
