At this stage in their life cycle, condition is everything. Turbo's trump N/A's for pricing and the closer to original spec the higher the figure should be IMO.

As for an actual figure, I couldn't tell you.

as above, what year are you selling, turbo/na etc.
location?

I have been approached about possibly selling mine but i'm not ready to sell yet.

I could pass on your details if you wish.

Anything to avoid donedeal wasters for someone...

I've seen your ad on adverts, I'd say it should worth 3500 - 4000, although I'm only a car owner not a dealer.

As its a REV2 with 2nd GEN 3S-GTE engine and a T-Bar, it might get less interest. Looks good from the outside apart from the missing foglights, and I don't like the mismatched sidelights.

The interior however look very dusty, you are missing the door handle bezel, window control bezel doesn't seem to be in place, there is a hole beside the ignition, torn shift boot, carpet popping out under the handbrake lever.

These are little things, but they do matter much. Well, certainly for me.

The potential buyer must feel good when hops into the seat.

Cheers
